

School of Law won the best organization award in the international students' anti-drug publicity week

In order to promote the construction of safe campus, build a healthy and harmonious campus environment, guide international students to abide by the law, enhance their awareness of drug prevention and further improve their ability to identify drugs, in accordance with the implementation plan of the university's anti-drug work for international students, the School of Law, with the guidance of the College of International Education, carried out a series of anti-drug publicity activities and won the best organization award.

During the anti-drug publicity week, the School of Law organized international students to attend the lectures on legal education and anti-drug prevention knowledge organized by the College of International Education. It organized students to sign anti-drug pledges and distribute anti-drug knowledge manuals. By encouraging international students to participate in various publicity and education activities, it helps them understand the hazards and identification methods of various drugs, as well as the sources and distribution channels of drugs. The activities also help the international students to understand China's anti-drug laws and regulations and campus anti-drug policies, as well as how to prevent the hazards of drugs and protect their legal rights and interests.

The School of Law attaches great importance to the health education of international students and always puts the anti-drug propaganda work in an important position. In the future, the School of Law will continue to devote itself to providing more health education and services for international students, so that they can get a more comprehensive and better study and living experience on the campus.
